

MOTHER AND SON PERISH IN FLAMES

WILL DEDICATE MEMORIAL AT MOKENA MAY 30

Mokena will observe Memorial Day next Thursday morning, May 30 with a special program sponsored by the Mokena Civic Association at the Mokena School gym commencing at 10 o'clock.

The Mokena band under the direction of Howard Strom will furnish the musical program and the Civic club trio will sing.

The Wm. Martin post 715 VFW, and the Auxiliary of this post will also participate in the exercises. At the close of the program a parade will form at the school and proceed to the Memorial Pioneer Cemetery on Wolf at the south end of Mokena where a field piece will be dedicated as a memorial to the Revolutionary and Civil War soldiers buried in this cemetery. The VFW Post will be in charge of the dedication ceremonies.

The Boy and Girl scouts will decorate the graves in the three Mokena cemeteries with flowers and flags early Thursday morning before the Memorial program at the school.

Now as never before is the time for every loyal American citizen to attend Memorial day exercises and instill in the minds of the citizens and younger generation the worth of the priceless heritage of liberty and peace we are still enjoying while the insane nations of Europe are murdering each other on a whole sale scale. We must above all realize that we are Americans and must prize our liberties highly and never lose sight of the principles on which our nation was founded and which must be perpetuated.

Takes Over Gas Station

Willard Marti who has been associated with August Braun in the pool hall and ice cream business in Mokena, has entered the filling station business in Joliet.

A gasoline explosion caused a terrific fire in the home of Anton Nelson, one mile north of Mokena on Wolf road, Sunday morning about 8:30 o'clock in which Mrs. Frances Nelson, 45 years old and one son Raymond, 24 years old, burned to death.

Details of the tragedy as could be gathered from a maze of conflicting reports are as follows:

The family was preparing for the Sunday dinner and a gasoline range in a small kitchen was being used. The gasoline tank of the stove was running low. The younger son, Russell, 19 years old got a five gallon can of gasoline and refueled the stove. When the stove was being relit, there was a sudden and terrific explosion and in an instant the burning liquid was thrown over the two boys and Mrs. Nelson and the small home immediately became a roaring furnace.

Awakened by the blast, Mr. Nelson, who was still in bed rushed out in his night clothes. He saw Russell who had leaped through a window, rolling on the lawn trying to extinguish his burning clothes. Realizing that the wife and son who were trapped in the building were beyond aid, Mr. Nelson gave his attention to Russell, rushing him in the family car to the office of Dr. E. G. McMahon in Mokena, only to find the doctor was at the Silver Cross hospital in Joliet. The father then sped on to the hospital and then rushed back to his home.

He learned that his wife and older son both had perished in the inferno. He collapsed and was taken care of by friends and neighbors. Two daughters, Evelyn, 23 and Shirley, 11 were dressing when the explosion occurred and escaped injury by fleeing from the burning home by way of the basement door.

Fred Brown of Mokena was driving south on Wolf road and was a short distance from the Nelson home when the explosion occurred and saw a great sheet of flame shoot high in the air. He was one of the first persons on the scene, but the heat was so intense and the fire burned so fiercely that no attempt to rescue those trapped in the burning home could be made.

The Mokena Fire Dept. was summoned and Fire Chief Herman Schweser quickly responded. A hose was placed in a small creek flowing by the north side of the burning dwelling and a steady stream of water was played on the fire.

Fanned by a strong southwest wind, the flames quickly ignited a large chicken house and a garage. Both buildings were destroyed. The chickens were turned out and saved.

The Orland Park Fire Dept. also was called but upon arrival at the fire scene, Fire chief, John Helenhouse found it was impossible to save the building which was entirely gutted, only a portion of the frame work remaining standing.

Soon as the blaze died down the charred bodies of mother and son were found where they had fallen after the explosion. It is thought that the terrific concussion of the blast and the heavy billows of black smoke caused almost instant death to both. Their bodies were burned beyond recognition.

Coroner Londus Brannon was notified and after his deputies arrived the bodies were removed by Kruse a Chicago undertaker to his undertaking rooms in Chicago.

Funeral services were held Tuesday at 2 p.m. at the Chapel, 5652 S. Ashland Ave. Interment was made in Mount Hope.

Russell is in a very critical condition in Silver Cross hospital suffering from second and third degree burns. Nurses in three eight hour shifts have been attending him since he was brought to the hospital Sunday morning. He was very seriously burned about the face, head, hands and arms. Dr. E. G. McMahon of Mokena is the attending physician. Mr. Nelson also sustained burns about the face and hands.

Only a few articles of furniture had been saved. The family is left destitute as they carried no life, accident or fire insurance.

A public subscription has been taken up in Mokena by the business men to aid the family.

Mr. Nelson had been out of work and had just recently returned to work in the Chicago Stock Yards where he is employed as a pipe fitter. Russell had also been working in Chicago.

Mr. Nelson came to Mokena about 12 years ago and built his home on a five acre tract of land along Wolf Road.

The remaining members of the stricken family are now making their temporary home in Chicago. Those surviving are the husband, one son Russell, three daughters, Evelyn, Irene and Shirley. One sister, Mrs. Hanna Navratil one brother, John Kreisel, the latter of Chicago.

Hawaiian Plebiscite to Focus Attention On Forty-Year Struggle for Statehood

By ROBERT McSHANE

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
THOUGH the 48-starred flag of the United States has remained unchanged since Arizona and New Mexico were admitted to the Union in 1912, a determined attempt is being made to add another star to its constellation. Hawaii—as at least part of its population claims—wants to become the forty-ninth state.

Culminating more than forty years of effort to secure full rights as an integral part of the nation, the Territory of Hawaii will hold a plebiscite next November to record by popular vote the aspiration of her people for statehood.

The plebiscite will be included in the general elections in the territory November 5. It will have no direct bearing on the granting of statehood, other than to focus national attention on the issue. Its sponsors hope to expedite action by congress on a bill providing for statehood now pending before the house committee on territories.

To many people of the islands, the issue is crucial. Statehood to them represents the fulfillment of a hope that was born nearly a hundred years ago and has been ardently cherished since Hawaii was annexed in 1898. Activated by a group of American colonists in the islands, a move for the annexation of the then Kingdom of Hawaii was almost consummated in 1854. The death of King Kamehameha III put an end to treaty negotiations that were almost completed.

Sentiment Kept Alive.

Nearly a half century passed before the matter again arose with sufficient decisiveness to bring it to an issue. But sentiment for annexation was kept alive by the growing number of Americans settling in the islands and by the constantly greater integration of American institutions into the body politic.

When annexation finally came, Hawaii would have much preferred that it be as a state. Those who worked for annexation, however, were of the opinion that the United States would follow its established policy and advance her to statehood when she had demonstrated her fitness. Present day advocates of Hawaiian statehood insist that it was upon this understanding that she surrendered her sovereignty and became a United States territory.

Now, Hawaii feels, she has been kept waiting overlong; it is just 40

Hopeful citizens of Hawaii have added a forty-ninth star to the United States flag in anticipation of the day when that country will be admitted to statehood. However, the extra star is just an experiment, and the flag won't be used until the issue has been decided.

Japanese residents, 148,972.

Within the territory, the civil and political structure closely parallels that of a state. The governor, secretary of state, and the higher judiciary are appointed by the President of the United States. The legislature and major local officers are elective. The territory is divided into counties which have the same home rule as those of a state.

As a territory, however, the parallel ends there. Her people cannot vote in national elections for the President and vice president, and they have no senators or representatives in congress, but are represented at Washington only by a single delegate who has no vote.

This, to the people of Hawaii, is contrary to American tradition. To them it means taxation for representation. They point out that up to the middle of 1937 a total of $155,858,707 had been contributed by Hawaii in federal internal revenue.

The people of Hawaii pay the same federal taxes as the people of the states. Tax figures show that Hawaii has consistently paid more into the federal treasury than have 14 to 19 of the states.

Carries State Responsibilities.

She is subject to the same laws. She would be included in compulsory military service in case of another draft, as she was during the first World war. In short, she carries the same responsibilities in every respect as those of a state.

As a state, Hawaii would be entitled to two senators and one

Hawaii has chosen the plebiscite to be held next November. The matter is non-partisan; both the Republican and Democratic parties in the islands are sponsoring the plebiscite and urging the people to vote. So general and wholehearted is the support being given to it in the islands that it is freely predicted the affirmative votes will be virtually unanimous.

Other fears for Hawaii's chances of eventual statehood center around the islands' military importance. Hawaii is America's first line of defense in the Pacific ocean—the bulwark which stands between the states of Oregon and Washington, with their totally inadequate facilities for warding off an enemy, and invasion by the fleet and air armada of a foreign belligerent.

Army, Navy Oppose.

Hawaii is a Gibraltar-like element in the nation's national defense scheme, and because of that a barrier to its statehood arises. Both the army and navy departments of the United States have expressed strong opposition to any change in the islands' form of government.

Uncle Sam has spent millions for the fortification of the islands, and indirectly to protect the mainland of the United States. California, with extensive fortifications, is considerably better equipped to fight off an enemy invasion than either of the two states to the north.

Pearl Harbor, United States naval base situated in the island of Oahu, eight or ten miles from Honolulu, is the center of the elaborate network of defense. It is the snug and secure anchorage where the whole fighting fleet of the nation can lie at anchor; on its shores are a navy yard, a submarine base, a powerful radio station, fuel tanks, dry docks, barracks and other military necessities.

Because of this, army and navy executives are hesitant to approve of any measure which would change the islands' form of government.

They fear that a change might, by the greater independence of statehood, interfere with future development of the United States' mid-Pacific stronghold.

Norwegians Given Credit for Weather Forecasting System

SAN FRANCISCO.—To Norway belongs the credit for having originated the system of mass analysis in making weather forecasts, according to Charles L. Mitchell, senior forecaster of the United States weather bureau. That system is now used in the United States.

"While there has been something of a revolution in weather forecasting since the World war," he said, "nevertheless it was the Norwegians who, during the World war, originated the system of mass analysis now in use."

Schools Maintained.

"This is now so much part of the work that we maintain schools in both Chicago and Washington, where weather forecasters can take a three-month course in this part of the work."

"Before the war forecasting was largely by reckoning from high and low depressions as shown on the weather map."

"During the war, however, weather forecasters were unable to get reports from ships on weather conditions, for the reason that these reports are valueless unless the precise positions of the vessels are known."

No Forecasts Sent.

"For manifest reasons the belligerents did not want to make known to the enemy the position of any ship, and so weather forecasts from them were not sent out."

"It was then that the Norwegians began studying cloud and air formations and by the application of mathematics were able to make shrewd weather forecasts."

"At present we are able to make up what might be called a 'topographical' map of air layers, except that the air is always in motion."

When it is necessary to iron a rough-dry garment at once, try this method: Dampen it, roll it tight, wrap it in a cloth and then in paper, and put into the oven while the irons are heating. Evaporation will cause it to be thoroughly dampened in a few minutes. But care must be taken that the oven is not hot enough to scorch the garments.

Made with a long, unbroken line in the back, 8631 has a front panel widening toward the hem, (in itself creating the illusion of height as against width because it directs the eye up and down) bodice gathers and shoulder darts. Thus with a few easy details, it assures correct fit over the bust, slenderness of waistline and hips.

Clothes From Trees

In parts of South America, natives skin the bark from certain trees, cut holes for the arms, and wear it like a shirt. In Rhodesia the inner bark is stripped from trees and soaked in water. Originally white, it becomes brown, soft and pulpy. It is then tapped gently with a club and twisted and stretched to about four times its original area. It is rubbed with oil, dried in the sun and worn as a cloak.

Old in Hours

A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time.—Bacon.

Although Hawaii is better known to the layman as an ideal vacation spot, it is known to military experts as one of the most closely guarded island groups in the world. This lone guard, standing beneath tropical palms, is symbolic of the U. S. army's heavily fortified Hawaiian area.

years this year that formalities were completed which established her as a territory.

Racial Problem Overdrawn.

Hawaii claims that the one frequent argument used against statehood—her racial problem—is one that has been greatly misunderstood. According to census figures she has a lower percentage of alien population than the city of New York, and it is declining yearly. Many who have visited the islands declare that nowhere have citizens two or three generations removed from immigrant ancestry developed a more united loyalty or a stronger feeling of Americanism.

Based upon 1935 calculations (and Hawaii's population has increased considerably since that time) the distribution of population by race was estimated to be as follows:

Hawaiian, 21,710; Caucasian-Hawaiian, 18,742; Asiatic-Hawaiian, 17,236; Chinese, 27,264; Korean, 6,668; Filipino, 54,668; Portuguese, 20,550; Spanish, 1,267; Puerto Rican, 7,368; other Caucasian, 50,258; and representative in congress, with a second representative upon the addition of less than 40,000 people to her present population. (Hawaii claims a 1940 population of 414,000, which either exceeds or compares with the population of nine states.)

Hawaii's gross assessed valuation is more than $425,000,000, surpassing that of nine of the states. This figure, records show, exceeds the gross valuation in any state at the time of its advancement from the status of a territory.

Sugar production is the biggest industry of the islands, accounting for 80 per cent of the world's supply. Vacationists and travelers annually spend upwards of $20,000,000 on her shores. With completely modern public utilities, large financial and commercial institutions, splendid highway system, inter-island transportation by water and air, her progress puts her on a par with other sections of the United States.

Plebiscite Is Non-Partisan.

Now, as a dramatic way of registering her claim for statehood,

'Joe College'? He Doesn't Exist!

STATE COLLEGE, PA.—Hollywood to the contrary, there is no such typical student as "Joe College" or "Betty Co-ed," says Pauline Locklin, assistant professor of English literature at the Pennsylvania State college.

"There is no more a student type," she asserts, "than there is a student nose."

The college man drinks what he is thirsty for and can pay for, she declares. "It may be benedictine, buttermilk or lemon coke." As to dress, the student often is purposely indifferent just to preserve his individual personality.

"The so-called collegiate type of humor is another myth," she said. "Most of such humor is imitative and is copied as much in towns and cities as on a college campus."

CHAPTER XVII

The Resident was worried. In view of the prevalent political unrest and of the convenient fact that the State of Kadur had been quiet for years, he had received confidential instructions from his State Department to be very discreet in his relations with the court of Kadur. It was impossible to misinterpret the order. It was plainly worded. He was not to interfere, if it could possibly be helped.

On the other hand, he had discovered, rather to his annoyance, that Norwood was a very likeable person, with an exceptionally good service record. Even prejudice couldn't make him believe that Norwood had accepted a bribe. It might be impossible to prove that Norwood hadn't accepted one, and there might be a cloud over Norwood's career forever after. But the Resident hadn't a doubt that Rundhia, or else perhaps the priests, or even both of them in some nefarious secret alliance, had framed Norwood. He was inclined to believe that the priests' agents had bought Rundhia, with a view to some political advantage after Rundhia should have come to the throne. Rundhia, he suspected, would do almost anything for cash.

Not being a fool, nor even a very unimaginative man, he suspected that Norwood's interest in Lynn Harding was something rather more than platonic.

And one could believe almost anything of Rundhia: even believe that Rundhia might act honorably, if honor and the circumstances didn't clash with Rundhia's convenience. The Resident liked Rundhia. Almost everyone did who knew him. But it was a bit difficult to separate Rundhia from Rundhia's unregenerate inclinations and his record. So the Resident wrote a report, marked "secret," to the State Department, in which he respectfully urged His Majesty the King's advisers to oppose Prince Rundhia's succession to the throne of Kadur. He had small doubt that his advice would be found acceptable.

But that wasn't going to save Norwood. It was far more likely to ruin Norwood, because Rundhia employed a secret agent in Delhi, who would learn of the Indian Government's intentions about the veto in next to no time. Rundhia, and Rundhia's friends, would jump to the conclusion that Norwood had been using secret influence in order to get back at Rundhia for the accusation of bribery. Rundhia and his friends would strike back, and there would be so much purchased, perjured evidence produced, that Norwood would have no chance whatever.

So the Resident decided to do some private investigation on his own account.

There was nothing for it but to call on Mrs. Harding and to ask her to summon Lynn to the guest-house for a confidential interview. He detested Mrs. Harding. He knew she was a snob and he suspected her of being a title-huntress. He had called on her once, and she had been damned rude, because she hadn't understood his position; she had suspected him of being merely one more penurious British officer who wished to make Lynn's acquaintance. But there are lots of unpleasant tasks that a man feels called on to undertake, in the course of duty, so the Resident ordered his car and set forth, calling en route at the Post Office to register his letter to the Department of State, so that his Parsee secretary shouldn't know about it and be tempted to talk.

Aunt Harding's locked and labelled trunks stood in a severe row at one end of the veranda. Aunt Harding reposed on pillows at the other end, where she received the Resident with hostile politeness. The veranda faced away from the sunset and the surrounding trees cast a deep shadow, so the electric light had been turned on in the living-room, and the only light there was came through the living-room window. Aunt Harding couldn't see him very well, and she hadn't her spectacles. But she remembered his name, and she had learned, indirectly, since their first interview, that he was a personage. So she bristled self-defensively and patronized him.

"Mayn't I offer you whiskey? You English are such devotees of that drink, aren't you. In the States, our men drink Bourbon. Please smoke."

"I came to talk with Miss Lynn Harding."

"You will have to look for her elsewhere."

"Oh, I know she's at the palace. Isn't there a telephone? Could you ask her to come here a moment? It won't take long. I merely want to ask her a few questions."

"I can't do what you ask. I am no longer responsible for Lynn. If I should summon her she wouldn't obey me."

"Oh? I hope nothing serious has—"

"A plot! Dishonorable! Contemptible! I won't bore you with my private affairs. It is sufficient to say that I received an insolent communication from the Maharajah. She has invited Lynn to stay with her—with consulting me, mind you. And I have received an astonishing note from my niece, addressed to me, but intended for Captain Norwood, of all impossible people! As if I were a mail box! And as if I didn't know what is being said about Captain Norwood! It was a deliberately malicious insult to me!"

"Did you forward the note to Captain Norwood?"

"No. Why should I?"

"May I see it?"

"No. Certainly not."

"Well, Mrs. Harding, I think you are within your rights about that. Quite commendable. Yes. Very. But shouldn't Norwood get it? If you care to put it in an envelope and seal it, I will have it sent to him by a very reliable messenger."

"One more effort to make of me a mere convenience! I won't do it."

The Resident, having felt out Mrs. Harding's punches, countered. He began his attack:

"Mrs. Harding, it is quite true that you don't know what is going on. If it weren't that Captain Norwood, who is a gentleman whose opinion I respect, has assured me that your niece is a thoroughly nice girl—"

"How does he know?" Aunt interrupted.

"He is an officer of unblemished record, and a gentleman who has never done a shabby thing in his life. That is why I value his opinion."

Aunt interrupted: "I have my own opinion of an officer and a gentlemen about whom even babus and servants gossip. If Lynn had wished to associate herself with common graft and bribery, she might better have remained in America. We have plenty of corrupt officials—mostly of foreign extraction. I am thankful to say. Many of them Irish," she added.

The Resident smiled: "Yes, Mrs. Harding. I confess to being Irish. So look out! I will take no nonsense from you. If necessary, I will confront you with Captain Norwood and let him demand that letter."

"What if I destroy it?"

"I will have you arrested."

"I am leaving tonight," said Aunt Harding, firmly.

"Oh, yes? It is a long way from here to the station. You have a lot of luggage. You propose to catch the midnight train?"

"I have made my own arrangements with a native contractor, thank you."

"I understand, then, that you propose to go away at midnight, leaving your niece to her own devices."

"Yes."

"Well, that is perhaps outside my province. But there is no question about my responsibility in connection with Captain Norwood. He is a distinguished young officer, in temporary difficulty, who needs all the legitimate help he can get. He is well connected, and popular. He is the younger brother of the very distinguished Earl of Ashlawn. Numbers of people would be shocked if Norwood were disgraced. You have a letter belonging to Captain Norwood, that he possibly needs. Think that over, Mrs. Harding. It is now up to you. Good evening."

CHAPTER XVIII

Norwood went the round of the sentries. There were only four of them. They had already received orders from Sergeant Stoddart. Norwood repeated the instructions:

"There are thieves in the neighborhood, and there is a rumor that there might be a raid on the camp. It isn't likely to be anything serious, but look out for it. Don't kill anyone if you can help it. In any event, you are to challenge three times and then fire your first shot in the air. I am expecting visitors, who may perhaps approach stealthily, because their business is secret.

So look out for them, and be careful not to mistake them for thieves."

He returned to his tent, where O'Leary sat holding an empty glass with futile optimism.

"Get out of here, now, and make yourself useful."

"Me—useful?"

"Yes. Those Brahmins with whom I talked down near the waterfall this morning—"

"Yeah, they slipped one over on you! I heard all about it."

"Hold your tongue then. I expect they'll be coming to talk to me about my visiting the mine."

"You need a nurse," O'Leary answered. "You'd never get your brass hat one of these days if it weren't for your Uncle Moses. Them there Brahmins are as likely to come and talk to you tonight as I am to kiss the Queen of England. They figure they've bought you. And they figure they can prove it on you, if you don't come across. They'll sit quiet, them Brahmins will. What you're up against is what I warned you. That Bengali doctor was too scared for his own skin to be telling me lies. Set your lamp to one side of the tent and eat your supper in shadow, if you can't eat in the dark. Watch out they don't chuck no more cobras at you. They've guns. They're automatics. And there's Gulbaz in back of this, so watch out. Gulbaz and a woman."

Norwood stared at him. "Woman?" he said. "What do you mean?"

"You told me to mind my own business. This ain't my business."

"Talk!"

"How about another whiskey?"

"Do you wish to be sat in the cook-fire?"

"You'd spoil your supper! But I've been thinking. If you want to know what I was thinking, I'll tell you. Barring two or three injustices you've done to me, and I'm of a forgiving disposition, there's only one man in Kadur, by my reckoning, who'd pay money to see you dead and buried."

"You may name him."

"Name him yourself. Him and you was thumbing a guitar and singing to the same girl. Let's suppose he knows, for instance, that the priests slipped you a bribe. And let's suppose he thinks you're honest. Let's suppose he thinks you'll earn the bribe and fix it so the priests win their case. And him heir to the throne. And him and you mashing the same golden-haired beauty. He'd be as officer-headed as you are if he didn't hit quick—and below the belt. He'll hit hard! What's to stop him from spiking the Brahmins' case by getting them blamed for having murdered you? Answer that one! Why not lay off the girl? If I was you, I'd—"

"Don't let me have to caution you too often, O'Leary. What I expect from you is information. I do my own thinking. If I should ever need advice from you I'll tell you."

"Tain't never no use advising nobody about no woman," said O'Leary. "I know symptoms when I see 'em. All right, mum's the word. I ain't saying nothin'."

"Get out of here."

After supper, Norwood wrote another letter to Lynn Harding. He didn't tear up that one. He addressed it in care of Mrs. Harding at the guesthouse, and then stuck it into his tunic pocket. He was still undecided. Determined, but not ready with his plan. O'Leary came and warned him again about sitting too near the lamp, so he went outside the tent and sat in the shadow cast by the rising full moon. A sentry challenged.

"Careful!" Norwood shouted.

"Don't shoot unless you have to. And don't shoot to kill!"

A bullet whizzed past him—then another. They came from two directions.

"Sentries, hold your fire!" he shouted.

Stoddart came charging up, breathing hard, fastening his tunic and belt as he ran.

"All present, sir! All ready!"

"Very well, Stoddart. Keep your hair on. Post two men to guard my tent. Send two to the horse-line and the remainder to guard the store tent. Thieves—I think."

Norwood walked ahead into the darkness, shadowed by O'Leary.

"Now what?" asked O'Leary.

"For the love o'—"

"Fetch a lantern on a long stick. Hurry."

Norwood stood in deep black shadow waiting for him. O'Leary ran up with a lantern at the end of a very long stick—at least ten feet long.

"Give that to me. Next shot they fire, raise a yell that I'm hit."

"Okay. I get you. You're a credit to your Uncle Moses."

Norwood held the pole extended toward his left to its limit. He walked forward. The lantern danced as if it were in someone's hand. A bullet spat out of the darkness. Norwood fell. O'Leary shouted at the top of his lungs:

"Stoddart! Hi there, Stoddart! They've shot the Captain! He's dead! They hit him through the heart!"

Stoddart and four men came hurrying. Norwood whispered:

"Pick me up. Carry me into the tent feet first."

"Mournful and solemn," O'Leary added.

"Lay me on the cot in full lamplight. Spread a sheet over me," said Norwood.

"He's as dead as trouble," said O'Leary.

So they carried Norwood to the cot and there he lay, in lamplight, while Stoddart slightly overdid the business of taking over command. O'Leary scouted. At the end of ten minutes, O'Leary returned to the tent.

"That's done it. They've gone. I crashed among the bushes like a pig with a panther after him. Nobody fired a shot. There wasn't a sound. They've gone for good. All Kadur will know that you're dead, within twenty minutes. They may even tell 'em the news at the palace, though I doubt that. Palaces get the news late, after other folks have had time to lay their bets."

Norwood sat up. He stared at O'Leary. O'Leary held his tongue. He watched, waited. Norwood didn't speak for sixty seconds. Then:

"O'Leary, there is just one chance in fifty that Prince Rundhia is on the wall, by that kiosk, where he was last night."

It almost seemed as if the night knew that Norwood had made up his mind. He was riding a fresh horse, but he didn't hurry. He was followed by a mounted squire, and by O'Leary on another horse. The horses, the squire and O'Leary behaved like a snake's tail. They followed the head without asking questions. Norwood gave no orders. He didn't tell O'Leary what he intended to do. But as they came near the palace garden wall, he reduced the speed a little and O'Leary, without needing to be told to do it, went scouting ahead.

O'Leary, on the other side, made plenty of noise. He made a signal, pointing with his right arm, as he broke from shadow into moonlight. There was nothing mysterious about his signal; he simply pointed to the swinging tendril of a baobab. It overhung the wall in search of earth in which to take root. It looked like a python, swaying slightly in the faint evening breeze.

Railway Postoffice Is Important Link in U. S. Mails

The efficiency of the United States mail is so taken for granted that very few people really know what takes place between the time a stamped envelope is deposited in one of those familiar olive-colored boxes and when it is received by the addressee.

Strange as it may seem, only a small proportion of out-of-town mail is actually sorted in the marble palaces whose portals are inscribed, "Neither sleet nor rain . . ."

A letter from New York to San Marino, Calif., for example, is handed once in New York and once in San Marino. In the meanwhile, however, that envelope may be sorted half a dozen times in order to speed it on its way in the shortest possible time.

For some unknown reason the United States post office rarely mentions the RPO (Railway Post Office) and its important part in the distribution of mail, hence very few people realize that without it our present postal service would be an impossibility.

In this country the use of the railway postal car dates to 1861, when John L. Scripps, then postmaster of Chicago, suggested that the mail which had accumulated at Cairo, Ill., on account of the Civil war, be sorted while it was aboard the train.

A few years of experimenting proved the merits of this idea and the use of railway post offices became a reality.

Originally the post office cars were used only on the main lines of long-run railroads, but today nearly every line in the country has service to form a network encompassing every town and hamlet of our nation.

Within these rolling post offices efficient crews of clerks not only break down mail shipments into section and state groups, but also sort it for cities and then go further to separate individual letters destined for different postal stations in a given city.

A clerk on the New York to Washington run, for example, is expected to know the exact location of any address in New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and perhaps several other intermediate cities served by that route.

JEREMIAH ANNOUNCES THE NEW COVENANT

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 31:31-37.
GOLDEN TEXT—I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people.—Jeremiah 31:33.

God's law written in the hearts of all men—surely that is the ultimate goal of all of our efforts, and therein we will find the solution of all of our problems. Jeremiah the prophet, in the midst of a despairing people with only captivity and sorrow before them because of their sinful rebellion against God, gives a prophetic foregleam of the day when all Israel and Judah should know God. Sin was to be forgiven, fellowship restored, and men over all the earth were to know God. Obviously, that prophecy is still future for Israel, but in the meantime God has permitted us to enter into the enjoyment of our covenant of grace.

I. The Old Covenant (vv. 31, 32).

The promise of a new covenant at once raises the question, "What was the old covenant?" We do not have space to make any complete study of it, but we note that while God did make a great covenant with Abraham, founding the nation of Israel (Gen. 17:1-14), the reference by Jeremiah is evidently to the covenant with Moses (Exod. 20:23). We observe that it was

1. National (v. 32). The old covenant was made with Israel only, and could bring blessing to the other nations of the earth only indirectly, as they might share the peace and prosperity which would have come to Israel had they been obedient to God. God was here dealing with a chosen nation for whom He had a specific plan and purpose.

2. Limited (v. 32). The blessing of the old covenant was limited not only in the sense that it was national, but also in that it was conditional. God's promise hinged on His word in Exodus 19:5: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people." In other words, the fulfillment of this covenant was dependent on the faithfulness of the people. We know that they failed.

3. Broken by Israel (v. 32). God was like "an husband" (v. 32) unto Israel. He was patient, tender, forgiving, always trying to restore them to Himself. He used His great power on their behalf as He "took them by the hand," and yet we read "my covenant they brake" (v. 32). Human failure in spite of God's promise and goodness, that is the history of man under law. Now, however, we turn to the new covenant of grace.

II. The New Covenant (vv. 33-37).

Jeremiah looked forward to the day when there was to be a covenant that is

1. Personal (v. 33). The reference here is not to a law written in a book, which may be neglected or forgotten, or broken because there is no power in man to keep it. This new law is to be written in the hearts of men. It is personal—not something which he shares as a member of a great nation.

2. Universal (v. 34). From the least to the greatest, every man shall know God. That promise awaits its future complete fulfillment to Israel (and remember that God has not forgotten His people). Even now, however, we have the spiritual fulfillment of the promise in the Church. It is true now that, regardless of nationality, education, wealth, or position, the grace of God is made manifest in the hearts of men and women everywhere.

3. Assured by God (vv. 35-37). The old covenant of law failed, for it hinged upon the faithfulness of undependable man—"If ye will" (Exod. 19:5). But the new covenant of grace rests upon the "I will" of God (v. 34; see also Heb. 8:10-12). This is indeed "a better covenant," which was established upon better promises" (Heb. 8:6). It is an "everlasting covenant" (Heb. 13:20).

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache; persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a national-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Riverview Opens With Many New Attractions

When Riverview Park rolled open its huge gates for its 1940 fun season Wednesday, May 15, the gala occasion was highlighted by a big "World's Premiere" of a new amusement ride.

This new attraction, making its debut for the first time in any amusement park, will be called the "Sky Rider". Park officials and ride engineers are unanimous in their praise of the new feature, claiming it to be equally as fast and breathtaking as any of the Park's famous attractions. The ride seats 40 people, two in each seat. Moving in a vertical, rotary motion, the cars carry the occupants to a height equivalent to eight stories and then lowers them in a thrilling, whirling descent.

Another innovation greeting Riverview visitors will be the "Magic Trees", a unique indirect lighting system transforming the Park's huge trees into columns of fairyland colors. Perfected by the Park's corps of electrical engineers, this attraction is another "auspicious first" for Riverview.

The "Sky Rider" and the "Magic Trees", however, are but two of the many new features awaiting Riverview fans. All up and down the Park's famous mile-long midway the visitor will see new rides, new shows and new attractions. The favorites of past years, the "Pair-O-Chutes", the "Bobs", the "Chutes" and other feature attractions will glisten and glow in brand new costumes of paint and electric lights representing every color of the spectrum.

Riverview's famed grove adjoining the "Chutes" pond and the Sunken Garden have not been forgotten either, in the 1940 program. Thousands of flower bulbs, shrubbery and trees have been planted, and barring inclement weather, will reflect nature's loveliness throughout the new season. Fun seekers find these beauty spots ideal retreats to "catch their breath" and rest before visiting other thrill attractions.

"Mortals and Immortals" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, May 19.
The Golden Text was, "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" (1 Corinthians 15:53).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us" (Hebrew 12:1).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The real man is spiritual and immortal, but the mortal and imperfect so-called 'children of men' are counterfeiters from the beginning, to be laid aside for the pure reality. This mortal is put off, and the new man or real man is put on, in proportion as mortals realize the Science of man and seek the true model" (p. 409).

Big Business
And GraceBy FLORENCE ALLEN
(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

"FRANK, you don't understand," said Grace for the tenth time that evening.

"Cut that out about my not understanding," said Frank, not without some courtesy. "I understand what you think you mean—you mean that you think just because you have spent four years in college and have come off with a degree you are too well educated to be my wife. Rot and rubbish! What I also understand is that I love you very much, in spite of your foolish notions, and that you are not the sort of girl, Grace Baldwin, who is going to be content with just a career, if that's what you call it."

"I'll always go on caring a great deal for you, Frank," she said. "Only now that I've got my degree I really think I ought to use it. I can't give up my ideals—even for you, Frank."

Grace wanted to succeed in some sort of business. She had specialized in economics and had taken several courses in finance, and on the whole felt that she would be an asset to any banking house or other establishment needing business ability of the first order. So one fine day she went to the city carrying with her some nice little letters of introduction to officers of several banks which she had begged from the president of her home bank.

As for the bank officers—they didn't even take the trouble to see her. Grace was told that she would have to send in a request by mail for an appointment if she really wished to see them.

Then one day she managed to see Mr. George, vice president of one of the business offices to which she had contrived to get a letter of introduction.

"I don't want any one around here to help run this business," he growled after she had hopefully recounted her qualifications. "Our payroll is too big as it is. Nobody's really interested. They just do their own little jobs and draw their salaries and hurry home at five. Do you think any of the girls around here would take it upon themselves to see that my private office was kept tidy? Not much. All they'd have to do would be to keep after the cleaning woman—stay after hours once in a while to see that she did the work. But no, they wouldn't think of such a thing."

"Perhaps what you have said will give me an idea," Grace said. "One or two of the other men I've talked to seemed to have trouble of somewhat the same sort."

But when Grace reached her home that week-end she was thoroughly discouraged. True, she had a little plan in the back of her mind, but when she came to consider it, it didn't seem so very good after all. Late that Saturday afternoon she telephoned to Frank.

"I'm sorry I said what I did to you," she said. "Maybe it is cowardly, but I'm going to ask you to give me another chance. You see, I don't believe that there ever would be a chance for me in the big business world. Why, the only possible chance I saw was to turn to and keep offices clean. Honestly, I actually worked out a sort of scheme of hiring some cleaning women and opening a little office to take contracts for cleaning offices and personally supervising the whole matter. I wrote to Mr. George about it. But nothing came even of that. So, Frank, if you want me you can have me."

And of course Frank took Grace in his arms, beyond measure pleased to find her in this humble frame of mind.

A few days later came a letter, signed by Mr. W. M. George.

"I didn't see any chance of giving you a job," said Mr. George, "but since reading your letter and considering your plans for an office-cleaning agency I think perhaps we could come to some agreement. I see you have brains and courage. I'm interested in your plan and would be willing to back such a venture and finance it. We could make it a sort of side issue. Meantime you could be of real use to me here in this office, and I guess I could mention a salary that would appeal to you."

Grace read the letter at first with eagerness. This Mr. George, she had found out, was a thoroughly reliable business man of high standing. And he had appreciated her qualifications—he really felt that he could make use of her. Grace's ostiest ambitions were beginning to come true. And yet?

Grace reread the letter and put it in her desk. She would answer it later in the day. Meantime she must keep her appointment with Frank. They were going to consult with an architect about building a little dovecot for two.

Corrigan Horse Racing

Horse racing is being streamlined the Corrigan way at Calistoga, Calif. Under the new system, the horses are trotted out on the track, where each owner is obliged to give up his mount and ride some one else's horse. When the race gets under way, it is a case of every rider trying to come in first, thus enhancing his own horse's chance of being last, for the last three horses win.

Hog and Cattle
Market Reports

(Reported by John Clay & Co.)

Uneven distribution of cattle and hog supplies of late is causing a widely fluctuating set of quotations in these classes. Closing steer sales last week, despite a bad break earlier in the period, were not much changed from a week earlier, while hogs actually finished higher for the week, late gains more than offsetting earlier depreciation. Early this week an oversupply of cattle and hogs again brought about sharp price reverses. Lambs are not changing much.

For the past several months the trend of production on farms has been toward cattle and away from hogs. This is being borne out by the percentages of cows, heifers and sows being marketed throughout the country. Only 43 per cent of the cattle slaughter of late has been she stock, the smallest per cent over a month's period in four years. The number of sows being processed, at 48 per cent, is largest for this particular season in 11 years.

Canada is exporting a fairly liberal quantity of beef and a very large amount of pork to Great Britain, while our exports of these products are of small volume. On the other hand, the United States is importing much beef (95 per cent canned from South America and some cattle and beef from Canada). During the first four months this year our imports of beef increased around 45 per cent compared with like period of 1939.

Despite our small exports, particularly of pork, storage stocks of that product decreased last month, but are larger than a year ago. Domestic consumers apparently have been eating pork faster than it was being produced. Then, too, weight of hogs is not as heavy as a year ago, which means less yield per hog. Lard stocks are down one per cent from the record holdings on hand April 1—not much, but an encouraging feature.

THE FORD WAY OF DOING BUSINESS

The Ford Motor Company was founded by a working-man for working-men. Its present officers began as employees of the Company. It was the first company to pay a minimum wage, beginning in 1914, at the then astounding figure of $5 a day. That was double the prevailing wage of the time. The Ford minimum is now $6 a day for all employees engaged in production work. And from that, the wages rise to $10.80 a day, with the average wage $7.25, exclusive of salaried employees.

The Ford Motor Company was the first large company to establish the 8-hour day—also in 1914. And the 40-hour week was inaugurated by the Ford Motor Company in 1926, years before any such laws existed.

The Ford Motor Company employs men without regard to race, creed or color. It is common knowledge that working conditions in the Ford shops are the best that science and constant care can make them. A square deal, a just wage and stabilized employment for a large proportion of our employees—and as fully stabilized for all as conditions will permit—enable our men to retain their personal independence.

In consequence of these policies the Ford Motor Company has one of the finest bodies of employees in the world. The larger proportion are mature men of long service with the Company—sober, decent family men. Hundreds of them have been with the Company for more than 25 years—thousands for more than 15 years. Their health record, home ownership and citizenship records are good.

All this is reflected in Ford products, whether cars, trucks or tractors. The work is honestly done. Materials are the best that can be made or procured. Less profit to the Company and more value to the customer is known throughout the motoring world as "Ford's way of doing business."

Ford Motor Company was the first to make a motor car within the means of the average family—quitting the manufacture of what was then the largest selling model in the world to do so. Its chosen field in all the 30 years since that time has been the average American family—for which it has consistently provided car facilities which formerly only the wealthy could buy.

It is the policy of the Ford Motor Company to share the benefits of advanced methods and management with workers and public alike. Increased wages and employment over a period of many years have resulted in

A 300 per cent increase in the built-in value of the Ford car and a 75 per cent reduction in its price.

Henry Ford and Edsel Ford keep daily personal touch with all phases of Ford manufacture. In a conference with his staff, Henry Ford often says: "Go ahead—I'll sit here and represent the public."

FORD MOTOR COMPANY

THEY HAVE NOT DIED IN VAIN

In the last century* and a half, hundreds of thousands of men have laid down their lives to give us a land where all men have equal rights. These honored dead bravely defended our country on the battlefield. Today we are called on to fight a new kind of war against those who would destroy us from within—a war that calls us to repel a barrage of words with the same courage our fathers displayed against enemy bullets. We will win because you can't fool America. In the words of Commander-in-Chief Otis N. Brown of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States:

"Because we know from what has happened in other countries—that the promotion of internal discord is a trick to destroy the unity of the American people—we refuse to be fooled by the gilded promises of those who preach hatred and intolerance. If these agents of sedition and revolution were less ignorant—they would

Our nation stands united in the faith for which Americans have given their lives. Secure against invasion from without, because of their sacrifice, we stand today with equal strength against foreign attacks upon our minds and hearts. Fomenters of discord and breeders of malice cannot fool us. They cannot shatter our first line of defense—the unity of the American people.

laugh at their own comic opera plots to destroy the ideals every veteran has risked his life and limb to defend. If these apostles of European dictatorship creeds would only close their eyes, for a moment, to the mythical profits they hope to gain as racketeers in patriotism—they would understand their efforts are in vain. They would know the ordinary liberty-loving American citizen wants no part or parcel of the misery that is rampant in Europe today under the very banners they would erect in the United States."

Let us keep faith with those who have given their last full measure of devotion for the cause of freedom. Let us highly resolve to preserve America as a land where our children—regardless of race, color or creed—can be assured of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

ORLAND WOMAN'S CLUB NEWS

Mrs. J. W. Lindquist and Miss Adella Schmaedeke attended the Illinois State Convention at the Sherman Hotel Thursday last. Among the guest speakers was DeLoss Walker, associate editor of Liberty magazine. His subject was "Help and Hope in this Day of Confusion". Mr. Walker was strongly opposed to our country interfering with European affairs and said we have enough trouble at home with an army of ten million unemployed people, one third being ill housed, clothed and fed and to take precedence or we will be licked by forces within. He pointed out that the goal of American people is happiness and said the only way to find it is by satisfying our wants and needs.

Mrs. Carl L. Schoeder, chairman of fine arts, Gen. Federation of Women's clubs, spoke on the subject "Our American Culture and the Fine Arts". She advised every person to have a hobby, irrespective of what their choice may be. Her definition of a sincere club woman was "she must believe what she says, and in what she does. She further declared that one of the highest aims to achieve is human personality."

Miss Edith C. Krough, Women's Division, American Enterprise Division of the American Enterprise Association spoke on the subject: "The American Woman, Active and Passive." A few high lights from her talk were that every man has a right to work at his vocation, to enjoy prosperity, individual freedom, initiative and responsibility, but without private enterprise this is impossible. Miss Krough stated also that the government should be a police agency to private business instead of competitor. Heavy taxes placed on small business today, cannot help but destroy private enterprise. She illustrated that private business can not exist without money and that the cost to a railroad company to create a job for one man is $26,000 also that there is more idle money in the country than idle men. She climaxed her talk by saying passive men and women cannot build private enterprise in the United States.

Last Friday the Orland Park High School students enjoyed a trip to the Field Museum, Rosenwald Museum of Science and Industry, the Shedd Aquarium. The trip was made in a special bus on the Southwest Transit line.

Mrs. Lucille Barton was off duty at the Orland school the forepart of the week due to illness.

Monday the Orland Park High School students heard and interesting lecture and witnessed an equally interesting demonstration on "Liquid Oxygen or Dry Ice" given by C. H. Berglund of Minneapolis.

Anne Snyder, Fred Reuling to Lead Prom

Miss Ann Snyder of Peoria, the daughter of Mrs. Foster Myrick and the niece of Mrs. Paul Oelke of Orland Park, figured in a brilliant social affair in Peoria according to the following account appearing in the Sunday Peoria Star of May 12:

Miss Anne Snyder, daughter of Mrs. Foster Myrick of Orland Park, who attends Bradley College at Peoria, has been chosen by Mr. Fritz Reuling, fellow student, as his queen to lead with him the Grand march at the Bradley Junior Prom last Friday night held in the Inglaterra ballroom.

Music for this grand occasion was furnished by the renowned Leonard Keller and his famous swing band.

Miss Snyder is a member of the Lambda Phi sorority and considered one of Bradley's most attractive co-eds.

Memorial services will be held at Palos Hills Cemetery Sunday, May 26th at 2 p. m. The services will be under the direction of "Your Buddy Post" No. 1057 Veterans of Foreign Wars and Auxiliary. Speakers will be Captain Wm. Grace, Jr., Vice-Commander, Captain Earl Southard, soloist, Dorothy Robson.

This little cemetery is over 109 years old. A veteran of every war has found his last resting place in this peaceful spot.

The Palos Oak Hill Cemetery Association would greatly appreciate a large attendance. The location is 131st Street one block east of the Southwest Highway.

Toman Says June First Tax Deadline

Less than two weeks remain before the deadline for paying the first installment of the 1939 taxes, said County Treasurer John Toman. June 1 is the deadline or penalty date and all unpaid taxes after that date will have a one per cent a month penalty added.

Toman says the closing days will naturally see a tremendous crowd rushing to pay and he advises anyone who can to pay by mail and check. This he says, will avoid hours of waiting in line.

He also advises all who have not received their bill to notify his office at once. All bills have been mailed, he says, but oftentimes a change in address or sale of property causes bills to be lost. Failure to receive your bill, he says does not exempt one from the penalties.

Toman says judging from the way taxpayers have been paying their bills this year, he feels they have become tax-minded and realize it is more profitable to pay on time than delay and have penalties added.

Two Cent Days At Riverview

Riverview's popular price policy of two cents days and five cent night and every Saturday until schools close will be two cent day. Thereafter, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays will find the youngsters enjoying the thrills of the Park at this low matinee price.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—The big White man is putting his chips on the Red this year. Bill White has selected a Cherokee Indian to drive for him in the 500-mile race at Indianapolis May 30th.

Joe (Big Chief) Chitwood is the only Indian in big time competition. He's a rugged individual who starred as halfback on the Haskell University Indian football team in Kansas, and who flashed to attention shattering twenty records on dirt tracks last year.

This marks his first attempt to win glory at Indianapolis, and the chief is ready to whom it up the minute they fire off the starting bomb.

"BOSSY" GOES TO SCHOOL

MANY CHICAGO CHILDREN SEE COW FOR FIRST TIME

Milk Foundation Builds for Increased Milk Consumption

For the thousands of boys and girls in the Chicago Area who have never had the opportunity of being on a dairy farm, or of even knowing exactly what a dairy cow looks like, the Milk Foundation, an educational health foundation, organized by members of the Pure Milk Association together with their co-operating dealers, has created its special "cow and calf" project.

This project consists of taking a cow and her calf around to the hundreds of schools in Chicago and its suburbs and letting the youngsters get a first hand view of "Bossy" to see and learn just how milk is made. Then, after each visit, special graded literature on the nutritional importance of milk is sent to the schools where the teachers use it as a complete supplement for a series of health lessons. (In addition to such specialized projects, the "regular" requests received by the Foundation from teachers amount to well over 25,000 each school year. These, in turn, represent between 40-50 students per teacher—or approximately 1,250,000 children! Thus, we may be sure that the Milk Foundation school program is making for a more health-conscious and therefore, more milk-conscious community—all of which means that the dairy farmer has and will continue to have a steadily growing market for his product.

The benefits of such a school program cannot be overestimated. A health education organization such as the Milk Foundation, can, as Carl E. Deyensroth, manager, puts it: "help to bring about higher standards of physical health through spreading the knowledge of milk's nutritional value and in addition as milk consumption increases, the dairy farming communities become more prosperous."

A GET-TOGETHER FOR THE GANG
(See Recipes Below)

Whether it's games for two or the whole crowd, you can flatter the going-on-19 set by serving unusual refreshments that carry an air of sophistication. They needn't be a burden on the chief cook, either, if she masters a few short cuts in preparing them.

Sandwiches, salted nuts, olives and radishes, little cakes and coffee make a spread that appeals to any age, and that is sure to be acclaimed by enthusiastic youngsters. Serve decaffeinated coffee, so that youthful enthusiasm needn't be checked in a demand for second cups; and pass lengths of stick cinnamon instead of spoons to stir this tempting brew. By all means flatter the sophisticated teensters by using your best demi-tasse cups.

An assortment of sandwiches can be made in short order if you cut the bread lengthwise, after removing the crusts, and buttering. Spread the filling on one big slice, top with another, and cut into half a dozen small sandwiches. You can make attractive little cakes that will look as handsome as the French chef's "petit fours" by cutting a plain loaf cake or plain layers into small shapes. Then cover with frosting, and decorate with candied fruit.

After-Dinner Coffee or Demi-Tasse.

(Extra Strength.)

Use 1½ heaping tablespoons decaffeinated coffee, regular grind, for each cup (½ pint) of water. Make by any method desired. If using decaffeinated coffee drip grind, measure well-rounded tablespoon instead of heaping tablespoon.

Rolled Sandwiches.

1 loaf bread (very fresh for rolling)
¼ cup butter (thoroughly creamed)
2 packages cream cheese
2 tablespoons cream
¼ teaspoon salt
Red and green liquid food coloring

Remove crusts from a fresh loaf of bread. Cut entire loaf in thin slices lengthwise. Butter each long slice and spread ½ of each slice with a filling made of cream cheese moistened with cream and tinted pink with red food color. Spread the other half with moistened cheese tinted with green food color. Roll like a jelly roll and wrap in a tea towel wrung out of cold water. Chill and then cut into thin slices for serving.

Orange Jiffy Cakes.

¼ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1½ cups cake flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup orange juice
Grated rind—1 orange

Cream butter and add sugar slowly while beating constantly. Add eggs, one at a time, mixing thoroughly. Mix and sift together the flour, baking powder, and salt, and add alternately with the orange juice and grated orange rind. Bake in greased muffin tins in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) for approximately 20 minutes.

Cornucopia Sandwiches.

Slice fresh bread in ¼-inch slices. Trim off crusts, so that each slice is about 2½ inches square. Spread with softened butter, and any desired sandwich filling. Roll, to form a cornucopia or horn. Fasten with toothpicks. Chill well before serving.

Fort Atkinson Ginger Creams.

(Makes 3 dozen 1½-inch squares)
½ cup shortening
2 tablespoons sugar
2 cups flour
¾ teaspoon soda
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ginger
1 cup dark molasses
1 egg (separated)

water, gradually, and beat well. Fold in stiffly beaten egg white. Spread batter in greased jelly roll pan (about 11 by 16 inches) and bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) for approximately 18 minutes. Cool and frost with boiled icing.

1½ cups granulated sugar
2¾ cups cake flour
1 teaspoon baking powder

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by
CARTER FIELD

Politicians of both parties question the accuracy of election polls . . . Congress is not influenced greatly by the attitude of organized big business.
(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON. — There is extreme skepticism among Washington's politically minded folks about the accuracy of the various polls, particularly as to pontifical statements to the effect that the electorate of such and such a state would vote thus and so as between two candidates.

This skepticism is felt both by New Dealers and by Republicans. The latter profess not to believe the reported strength of certain Democratic candidates other than Franklin D. Roosevelt. Neither do the extreme left wingers. These agree openly on a point which many Republicans concede privately—that Roosevelt is tremendously stronger than any other Democrat who could be nominated.

One recent poll showed that Cordell Hull would run slightly stronger than the President, as against Sen. Robert A. Taft. This carried no conviction whatever to a great many Washington observers who know their politics.

SECOND PLACE VITAL

"With a man as old as Cordell Hull especially when his health is none too good," pointed out a conservative Democratic senator, "it would be very important in the campaign who was his running mate. For instance, the result might be very different, even in the ballots of the very people polled, depending on whether Robert H. Jackson or Jim Farley, or Henry Wallace was the vice presidential nominee with Hull."

"I will deny that I ever said it if you mention my name, for obvious reasons, but if the slate should be Hull and Jackson, I would vote the Republican ticket personally, and I am sure that a lot of my friends would do the same thing. I would not bolt, of course. We saw what happened to the Hoovercrats after 1928. On the surface I would be regular—but highly impatient. I could not sleep at night if I thought that Hull, no longer young, was all that stood between the country and one of the shrewdest and ablest radicals I have ever known."

"And don't forget that I would like to see Cordell Hull President, if I could be sure that he would serve his term out!"

A DEAR DELUSION

It's rather curious how that dear delusion of the soap-box orators—and of many highly placed New Dealers—that Big Business runs this government and this country, persists. It would be enlightening to any one who has any doubt about the accuracy of this often-made charge to study the proceedings of the convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States—and then to watch the ensuing political developments.

It would be fairly accurate to call the chamber meeting a gathering of Tories. All of them admit certain social obligations which the New Deal program makes a start toward meeting, but the really solid applause always came at a peroration which advocated demolishing one part or another of the New Deal structure.

Particularly the chamber delegates applauded speakers who wanted the National Labor Relations board fired out the window—though they would save collective bargaining. They screamed their approval of returning control of relief expenditures to local communities.

JUST WHO THEY ARE

Now as a matter of fact, the men who attended this convention were a very liberal cross section of the successful business men of America. "Liberal" not in its political sense, so frequently misused, but in the sense that it was a generous sampling. They represent and are a substantial part of the "Big Business" element which the radical orators tell us run this country. They are the men against whom the anti-trust laws are aimed.

This being so, and it would be rather difficult to deny it, one might suppose, if he believed the radical orators, that congress would be giving an apprehensive ear to the utterances of these tycoons. One might expect there would be a rush on Capitol Hill to do their bidding.

That is one might expect all this if one were a visitor from Russia who had not heard anything about the United States except from left-wing orators. Because, of course, the plain truth is that congress paid little or no attention to the business men.

Bertha Wished to Know Punishment—Just in Case

"Don't fidget!" snapped mother.

Little Bertha stopped toying with the lid of her chocolate box and endeavored to concentrate upon the play. But it was a dull affair.

In two minutes her small fingers were busy again.

"Bertha, don't fidget!" repeated her mother.

Again she was obedient, but once more the production failed to hold her fingers away from the lid of the chocolate box.

"Now, Bertha," exclaimed her mother, "I warn you."

When her mother spoke like that she was not to be disregarded. Glancing doubtfully at the dull stage, and then at the tempting lid, Bertha whispered:

"Would it be a hairbrush, mummy, or just your hand?"

Your Reflection

The world is a looking glass, and gives back to every man the reflection of his own face. Frown at it and it will in turn look sourly upon you; laugh at it and with it, and it is a jolly kind companion.—Thackeray.

IT IS A JOILY WORLD

Quite Modest

They were discussing a certain public official.

"The trouble with him," observed the cynic, "is that he takes too modest a view of his own insignificance."

OPPORTUNE TIME

"If you know who stole your car, why don't you get it back?" "I'm waiting to see if he buys any new tires."

Maid (peeking through the keyhole)—Really, some people are too inquisitive. There's the missus reading her husband's mail.

A Bit Hasty

"So Tom took a course in first aid. Is he good at it?" "Well, a man was nearly drowned yesterday, and the first thing Tom did was to throw a glass of water in his face."

"It's beneficial to yawn when you feel like it," says a doctor. Not when the boss is talking to you.

Really Missed

Choir Boy—What made you resign from the choir?

Ex-Choir Boy—I was absent one Sunday and some one asked if the organ had been mended.

Discretion

Hearing someone prowling about downstairs, the timid husband seized a candle and proceeded to investigate, while his even more timid wife buried her head beneath the bedclothes.

Suddenly her husband came upon a burglar, who covered him with a revolver.

"Oh, don't take any notice of me," said the timid man quickly. "I'm only walking in my sleep."

You Can Make Your Own Summer Shade

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS
MR. AND MRS. NEWHOUSE looked out over their backyard and were in no mood to plant an acorn and wait for it to grow up to give them summer shade. Mr. Newhouse bought some second-hand pipe for a song and made a sketch for the frame of a shelter like the one I have shown at the upper right. He had a plumber cut and thread the pipe so it could be put together easily. Mrs. Newhouse wanted the shelter to be as cool as a dell, so she avoided all the hot red and orange colorings. The pipe frame was painted bright blue. Then she selected green and white striped awning material for the top. This material was 30 inches wide and 12 yards were needed. About 15 yards of bright blue bias binding were used for the scalloped edge. The method of fastening the awning to the frame is illustrated. The fabric loops were made of the awning material stitched in place through heavy woven tape.

Whether you have a new home or an old one, 10 cents to cover cost and mailing charges on Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book No. 1 can save you many dollars. In it are complete directions for slip covers, curtains, bedspreads, dressing tables and many clever and original things that may require the aid of Friend Husband to drive a nail or two. Mad

The following significant editorial recently appeared in the Publishers Auxiliary and is very timely so we are glad to reprint it:

BY

WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

Europe has gone stark-raving mad and that madness is destroying world civilization. All the social and governmental progress of centuries is crumbling under the devastating arms of a power-mad world. Today it is a condition that exists, not a question of who is responsible for that condition.

Regardless of who the victors in the terrific conflict may be, the civilization we have known and cherished will be lost throughout practical all of the world, with the possible exception of the Americas.

In at least three, and possibly four, of the other continents the rule of the dictator will prevail. That liberty, that individual opportunity, that freedom of thought and expression for which people of the world have heroically struggled for centuries will be lost.

Civilization may be saved in America if we stay out the world-mad conflict; if we are a united, homogeneous people; if we forget and forego class distinctions, class hatreds and race distinctions; if we work together as one people—Americans to preserve that freedom, that liberty we have cherished since the founding of our republic.

The major influence in any effort to preserve civilization in America must come through the American newspaper. Every newspaper editor must be a part of that effort. Those best able to play a vital part are the rural editors of the nation. Per thousand of circulation, the rural press wields a far greater influence than any other class of publications. It represents personal journalism, and its influence is that of its editor distributed through the printed word to those who know and respect him.

To a large extent, the future of America and the preservation of its liberty lie with the country newspaper editors of the United States—with the men and women who can guide the thoughts of the people of our towns and farms, the safest, sanest class in America's population. They will do the job.
